Going to a small, 1A school is nice because I have great friendships and relationships with my teachers. However, there are downsides to attending a small school such as AP classes being limited due to lack of student interest. In July, my school counselor made me aware that my high school wouldn't be able to offer AP calculus. This is a math requirement for me as I completed pre-calculus in my junior year. The circumstances were beyond my control due to budget constraints, lack of student interest, and master schedule conflicts. My parents and I had meetings with administrators, the superintendent, and my counselor. My only option was to enroll in a virtual academy and take the course remotely. I work in our school's library during my 6th period and complete the curriculum individually. I know at this rigor, it will be difficult to learn and retain calculus material, but I'm determined to succeed. I'm changing my routine so I can still participate in varsity volleyball, do well in regular day classes, and spend time with loved ones. I also reached out to one of my high school math teachers to help me with any questions I might have.

Hi Paige,

Congratulations on your admission to Central Washington University! We're excited to welcome you to our incredible community of Wildcats, and we hope you're equally excited to start your college journey.

A great education allows you to create the future you want. At Central, you can make memories with lifelong friends and form strong connections with mentors. Whatever goals you're striving toward, you can gain the skills you need to reach them through hands-on experience inside and outside the classroom.

Let us know you're going to be a Wildcat by accepting your admission. The sooner you take this important step, the sooner you can start getting ready to come to campus.

Accept Your Admission

You have an amazing future ahead of you, Paige. If you have any questions about CWU you'd like to discuss before making your decision, please feel free to reach out to us.

Sincerely,
